> _I woke up to the sound of the dodrio that morning. The sunrise was golden. I got out of my pokeball, ate breakfast, and got back in to take a nap. When I woke up, I was taken out of the pokeball and handed to a boy. I didn't like this boy. "Pikachuuuuuuu!", I yelled and shocked him. I heard the boy and the professor talking for a moment. When He handed the boy a pokedex and some pokeballs, I decided to shock both of them. How could the professor do this to me? The boy carried me outside to a crowd of people. While they were talking I zapped all of them. "Ha!", I thought as the boy got up and carried me away. Soon I learned that the boy's name was Ash. "Ash," I thought, " What a dumb name.". He was saying something to me, but I wasn't listening. I climbed up a tree and watched him. He was trying to catch a pidgey by himself! I watched his antics and burst out laughing so hard I almost fell of the branch! Well, he threw a rock at what he thought was a pidgey, but it turned out to be a spearow! It called out all it's companions and pursued us until we reached a creek and dove in. Until now I had no idea there were gyarados in that creek! Well, this girl fished us out and was talking to Ash for a little. Then the spearows showed up again. Ash took her bike and sped down the road with me in the basket. It started raining and storming. We tripped over a rock and fell in the mud. The spearows dove at us. Then Ash stood up and yelled something about protecting me to the spearows. I had defiantly misjudged this boy._

>I did the only thing I could do. I dove at the swooping spearows and let out a thunder jolt. "Pikachuuuuuuuuu!" The spearows flew away and we both fell back in the mud. "Well," Ash said, " We beat em." "Chuuu...", I said. Then the rain stopped, and a rainbow came out. Then a mysterious bird pokemon even i didn't know about flew over the rainbow. Then Ash picked me up and carried me toward a city._
